Constellations

KIM LIEBERMAN

This work shows a “constellation” of people who may not have met but who have moved through the same place – the Constitutional Court.

Constellations grew out of photographs taken at the Court of different people – judges, security guards, one of the Court architects, the tea lady. Though some of these people may have more prominent positions in society than others, one can never fully measure the impact of a single, ordinary life.

Eighteen blood-red figures are presented on postage-stamp paper that has an underlying grid of perforations. The figures are linked by these perforations, and by red silk thread reminiscent of the lines drawn between constellations of stars. ♦
